Exposition Opens In Brilliant Splendor

Sixty Thousand Attend First Day Festivities

President Roosevelt Offers Encourgement Hopes To Come Here Later In Year.

When the turnstiles opened Wednesday at 11 a. m. to receive the first paid admissions to San Diego's 1935 California Pacific International Exposition it was to greet a throng of sixty thousand visitors comprising representatives of every state in the nation and many foreign countries.

The ticket sale had far exceeded the most optimistic expectations of some two million advance sales. For several days before the Exposition opening the $2.50 books as well as the $5 and $10 books were entirely sold out.

With the opening of the Aladdin-like $20,000,000 Exposition at 11 a. m. there started a twelve-hour gala celebration that will long be remembered by all who attended this first day opening.

Preceding the opening of the gates the U. S. Marine band and color guard formed at 6th and Laurel streets, marching over Cabrillo bridge to the Plaza del Pacifico for the flag-raising ceremony.

At 11:55 there was a coast to coast broadcast over the Columbia system, then at 12:15 a coast to coast broadcast over the National system.

1 p. m. Recital at Balboa park organ.

2:30 p. m. Dedication of the Federal building.

3:15 p. m. Reception of Governor Merriam and dedication of the California State building.

7:45 p. m. San Diego Symphony concert in the Ford Music Bowl, Nino Marcelli, conducting.

8 p. m. President Roosevelt's official opening address thru public address system.

8:06 p. m. Turning on lights to illuminate all Exposition grounds.

8:15 p. m. President Belcher of the Exposition invites the world.

8:16 Spanish troubadors, Exposition band and chorus begin concerts.

8:20 San Diego Symphony concert under direction of Nino Marcelli, in Ford Music Bowl.

The President's Talk:

"It is significant and fitting that a great enterprise should at this time be dedicated to future generations. The decision of the people of San Diego thus to dedicate the California Pacific International Exposition is, I believe, worthy of the courage and confidence which our people now look to the future. No one can deny that we have passed through troubled years. No one can fail to feel the inspiration of your high purpose. I wish you great success.

"I shall always remember my visit with Vice President Marshall to the Pan Pacific Exposition in 1916. I sincerely hope that later in the year I can visit the new Exposition.

"Your Exposition is an international one. You have been prepared to share your aspirations with the peoples of other nations. They have been quick to respond, and many of them are actively participating in your efforts.

"So much for your tradition in southern California is closely associated with Latin-America that I am sure you must have noted with sympathy the increased cordiality of our relations with our sister republics. Recently it has been the sincere endeavor of the United States to remove causes of international friction and misunderstanding and to reveal our country as prepared to maintain its relations with the other nations of the Americas on a basis of entire equality and in terms of complete friendship. Surely such principles are the hope of our common future on this hemisphere.

"The architecture of the Exposition traces the course of human progress in your part of the country. The design of the federal building is based on the genius of a great race which long ago developed an advanced civilization in the regions south of you. The influence of the later Spanish and Mexican traditions is apparent in different buildings. Other features portray modern social, economic and scientific developments.

"What is before you represents progress, steps which have been taken and which have led us to this very moment in which we pause to look forward. I think we may well have confidence in our prospects. Government is being animated more and more by a desire for the well being of the people as a whole. A new public conscience is demanding that those engaged in private enterprise in turn be guided by conduct based on good ethics and good morals as well as on thoughts of profit.

"The American people are becoming increasing conscious of their obligations to the citizens of tomorrow.

"Rightly desiring to direct our thoughts to the future, you have endeavored and succeeded in giving to the very act of opening the Exposition a symbol of our expectations of future generations. Two small children, a boy and a girl, unknown to you and to me, are stationed somewhere near you. I wish I could see them—perhaps some day I shall—but I now delegate to them on behalf of the present younger generation and of the unknown generations to come, the honor of throwing the switches that will illuminate the grounds and open the California Pacific International Exposition."

Should Improve Mission Valley Road

Last week the San Diego Public Safety Committee, through Hal H. Hobson, secretary, asked the city council to make provision for paving or surfacing Mission Valley road from Old Town bridge to Fairmont avenue. This highway, the commission said, would relieve traffic on University avenue at far less cost than the widening of that street.

The Ocean Beach and North Shore area should get behind this move unitedly to give a quicker route to the many students who are now, and will later, attend State College. This proposed route we believe should be extended up Mission valley to State College for the benefit of students and keep them from making the trip now necessary up Pringle street hill to Mission Hills, thru the congested Hillcrest district and out to El Cajon avenue.

An almost direct route to the College would be out West Point Loma Blvd., to the dyke at the Causeway, then have a highway along the top of the dyke to Old Town to connect with the Mission Valley road.

Santa Monican Leases Mission Beach 'Center'

A deal was reported closed Monday by the California State Park Commission leasing the Mission Bay amusement center, now owned by the park commission, to Ernest Pickering, Santa Monica amusement magnate.

Mr. Pickering, is the report, will modernize and have the amusement center and concessions under operation in a very short time.

The eight-acre Mission Beach amusement area was taken over by the state last September. A full deed of ownership was given to the state by the Spreckels company. The state at first said it would not accept it unless the city of San Diego agreed to operate it. After considerable study of the matter, the city declined to do this. The state then asked for bidders and Mr. Pickering of Santa Monica won.

Pioneer Barbecue Committees To Meet

Next Wednesday evening, 8 p. m., at the Woman's club building, committees and citizens interested in putting on the Pioneers Barbecue on June 29th, will meet to make further arrangements for this celebration which will be the outstanding event of the summer season at Ocean Beach.

A change in arrangements has been made whereby the V.F.W. post at Ocean Beach will have charge of the parade and pageant and this organization is active with their plans to make it a colorful event of the day. Old Timers of the west are being asked to attend and interesting features will probably be included in a parade to take place in the morning or about noontime.

Old time pictures of Ocean Beach the Wonderland, merry-go-round, etc., will be shown on a screen Wednesday night, June 5, to bring back old times to the committees.

Exposition Big Affair

Everyone attending the Exposition on the opening day and night, are enthusiastic about it being a wonderful success. For the thousands who attend there will be full value for all the time and money spent.

A visit Wednesday night gives us just a glimpse of the many wonderful things to see. More than a full day can be spent at the Ford exhibit, which is the outstanding one of the Exposition, and many other days too should be arranged so that one can get the full benefit of learning about the production of oil, steel, copper, aluminum. Tour the western parks. See all of California in the State building. The wonderful electrical equipment and exhibits in the electrical building. See the federal building and arrange to spend hours and hours at the classical musical events to be given at the Ford music bowl.

The Midway too is going to attract a lot of attention, while the visit there may not be especially intellectual, it will be educational, along certain lines.

See the Exposition, enjoy it to the fullest, for you may never have another chance to get so much out of life in such a short time.

Crystal Pier Open For Inspection Sunday

Crystal Pier at Pacific Beach will be open to the public Sunday for their inspection and the Pacific Beach business people are anxious for any North Shore resident or visitor to come and see their newly extended pier.

The News was not notified whether fishing would be permitted Sunday from the pier but it is thought that this privilege likely would not be extended for this day, for a very large crowd of visitors is expected.

In connection with the proposed pier for Ocean Beach, a letter was sent by the local Chamber of Commerce to the council last week, notifying that body of the steps that so far have been taken in the past two years, so that the new councilmen would be familiar with action requested as well as favorable views by office of the city manager, some former councilmen, Supervisor Ed Hastings, SERA administrator John L. Bacon and others.

SURPRISE BIRTHDAY FOR FRYER AND BAKER

Complimenting Mrs. E. J. Baker and Mrs. James A. Fryer, (the latter a visitor from Idaho) Mrs. M. L. Whetmore entertained last Friday in her home at 4570 Voltaire street, with a very delightful surprise birthday luncheon. Birthday gifts were presented to Mrs. Baker. Dainty boxed cookies and candies accompanied with their favorite receipt, were showered upon Mrs. Fryer by the guests. Those enjoying this jolly affair were: Mrs. E. J. Baker, Mrs. J. A. Fryer. Mrs. May Schofield, Mrs. H. D. Pierce, Mrs. H. J. Pierce, Mrs. A. J. Gilbert, Mrs. B. Jackson, Mrs. Sarah Dolan, Mrs. Martha Burgess, Mrs. Minnie Major, Mrs. Ports and Mrs. Whetmore, and Rev. and Mrs. W. S. Dunn who called for a few minutes.

San Diego --- The Harbor of the Sun

(Written by John S. McGroarty)

The sunlight of the morning across the far hills broke,
From the dawn the veils of mist fell and faded as I woke;
The sea was bathed with glory in a sweep of swirling fire,
And I wandered with my soul in the Land of Heart's Desire.

The lemon was in blossom, and shimered in between,
Glowed the gold of the orange and the olive's flash of green;
I could see them from the waters that rippled, blue and bright,
On the Bay of San Diego in the golden morning light.

'Tis still as God has made it in the gladness of His dreams,
With the never-ending summer that forever o'er it gleams—
The mystic seas beyond it in the sunlight's golden fire,
And the Bay of San Diego in the Land of Heart's Desire.

(POINT LOMA HIGH SCHOOL)

In the county essay contest of the Better Housing Administration held in Roosevelt school auditorium last Thursday evening, May 23, Pt. Loma High school's two contestants, Barbara Healy and Milton Stewart, made a fine showing among the seven contestants. Milton placed first among the boys and Barbara made a very creditable showing among the girls, losing first to Mary Paxton of Herbert Hoover High school. Milton was heard over the radio last Sunday, May 26, and his essay speech has been forwarded to Sacramento to the state contest. The results of the state contest are therefore awaited interestedly at Point Loma High for only one boy can be chosen from California for the National semi finals.

Quite a number of students have joined the Exposition band and Exposition chorus. It is considered quite an honor to be in either one of these organizations, especially for students.

Those who have joined the Exposition band from Point Loma are: Jess Macbeth, Ronald Franco, Mack Graham, David Bryant and Jack Forsythe.

Those who are in the Exposition chorus are: Chas. E. Allen, Emery Bryans, Austin Hartvigsen, Wm. Leonard, Bruce Tichenor, Paul Winn Trevor Woodward, Belle Carey, Thelma Fox, Phyllis Bowlby, Rose Murphy, Jayce Demarest and Janice Demarest.

Point Loma also has two teachers in the chorus: Miss Ruth Henry and Myron Green.

——PLHS——

Among the up-to-date features recently worked out at Point Loma is the Exposition class project the students have enjoyed in English under Miss Frances Henking. Themes, oral and written; a bulletin board where clippings show the daily development of the exposition; and a large note book permanently preserving individual reports, themes, stamps, copies letters sent to eastern schools are the individual phases of the project. The class notebook entitled,

San Diego Host To The World
May 29—Nov. 11, 1935

has this Table of Contents:

1. Purpose and beginnings of the Exposition.
2. Building the Exposition.
3. Setting of the Exposition: Picturesque Balboa Park.
4. Permanent buildings in Balboa park.
5. New buildings for the Exposition.
6. Exhibits for the Exposition.
7. Prominent guests expected.
8. Midway or fun zone.
9. Pageants, carnivals, parades.
10. Points of interest in and around San Diego.

Another progressive and effective section of actual classroom results was the art department, assembly given to Junior and Senior High school students last Thursday and Friday, May 23 and 24.

When the curtain opened the stage disclosed a row of easels backing the audience in the foreground and three lovely murals, with students touching them up from step ladders, entirely covering the back ground. The murals represented three phases of the development of San Diego from Father Serra to the builders of the Exposition.

As the program progressed, one by one students rose from behind an easel, turned it to face the audience, disclosed the work piece by piece filed on the easel and mentioned each student creator of it. From a table at the side of the stage block print wall hangings were displayed piece on piece.

The program concluded with a talk on The Art of the Exposition by Mrs. Julia Andrews of the Fine Arts Gallery.

Work along these definite lines was displayed, many fine examples of it, by these students:

Murals: Ella Cook, Marjorie Linthicum, Frances Tone, Joan Foster and Paul Reed.

Handicraft and interior decorating: Naomi Schroeder and Mary Dell Rankin.

Spray work: Gene Stephens, Orlan Cunningham and Phyllis Mirow.

Posters, spray design and water colors: John Forward, Katherine Beach, Ruth Dumont and Robert Ziegler.

Life drawing, sketches and cartooning: Alpha Stephens, Ella Cook and Scott Miller.

Block printing: Ed Foster, Rosemary Moats and Ella Cook.

The third performance of Schubert's Rosamunde was given by the Point Loma High school students under direction of Myron B. Green Tuesday night, May 28 at Russ auditorium, before an audience of about 2000 people, comprised of delegates to the State Parent-Teachers' association and members of the entertaining local associations. The music department, the Point Loma PTA and all those students and teachers who contributed to the presentation of Rosamunde, may well be pleased at the calibre and success of the whole undertaking.

Point Loma chapter O.E.S. will meet Monday evening, June 3, in the Masonic hall with Edythe Kenline presiding. There will be initiation. A most cordial invitation is extended to all visiting members of the order. Hazel V. Lathrop will be chairman of the evening assisted by Betty Van Cott and Corana Burnett.

PILSUDSKI'S DEATH WORRIES STATESMEN OF EUROPE—FLEET MANEUVERS.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

©, Western Newspaper Union.

COMPLICATIONS in the already precarious European situation were expected to result from the death of Marshal Josef Pilsudski the virtual dictator of Poland. The "father of his country" succumbed to cancer of the stomach in Warsaw and his death was a great shock to the Poles for the serious nature of his affliction had been concealed from the public. The marshal's heart was interred at Vilna and his brain was given to science, according to his request; but his body was buried in the cathedral of Rawel castle at Crakow beside those of King John Sobieski, Thaddeus Kosciuszko and others of Poland's great men.

Pilsudski held only the office of minister of war, but was the real ruler of Poland, and there was anxious speculation as to his successor. Some observers thought this might be Col. Josef Beck, the foreign minister, who was especially close to the marshal. Other candidates were Alexander Prystor, former premier, and the present premier, Col. Walery Slawek.

The iron-willed marshal had been a consistent advocate of a close rapprochement between Poland and Germany, sternly curbing the activities of those who favored the course of breaking away from the reich and standing with France in her policies for eastern Europe. Pilsudski was rather offended by the recently signed pact between France and Russia, and French Foreign Minister Laval stopped in Warsaw on his way to Moscow to try to pacify him; but the marshal was too ill to take part in the discussions and Laval went on to Russia without even seeing him.

The government announced it would continue to function as though Pilsudski were alive. The authority of the dictator, it said, has passed to his lifelong friends, President Ignace Moscicki, Premier Slawek, Foreign Minister Beck and Gen. Edward Rydz-Smigly. The appointment of General Rydz-Smigly as Pilsudski's successor as inspector general of the army was in accordance with the marshal's command.

The government denied any changes were impending. It announced that both the internal and foreign policies which Pilsudski inaugurated will be followed faithfully by the men he had trained for executive positions.

RIGID censorship, such as would be imposed in war time, shrouded the American fleet's tactical operations in the Pacific, but was relaxed enough for the announcement of two unfortunate occurrences. While destroyers were leading larger vessels through an "enemy" network of submarines the Lea smashed into the Sicard, tearing a big hole in her side. Richard Chadwick, second class gunner's mate on the Sicard, was killed and three other men were slightly injured, official records stated.

Commander E. W. Tod.

Lieut. Mathias B. Wyatt of San Diego, a graduate of the naval academy, was piloting one of eighteen fighting planes which took off from the aircraft carrier Saratoga 200 miles east of Honolulu to ward off an attack of "enemy" submarines. His plane was caught in the slipstream from another and fell into water three miles deep. No trace of him or his ship was found.

In connection with the maneuvers the greatest interest was in the mass flight of forty-three planes from the Pearl Harbor naval base westward, presumably to Midway islands. They were under the command of Commander E. W. Tod, U. S. N., and for the time being all that the public was permitted to know was that they reached their secret destination safely and were "executing their missions." One report was that the planes made one stop en route and that forty-one of them finished the flight together, two arriving later.

REAR ADMIRAL RICHARD EVELYN BYRD and members of his South Polar expedition came sailing home at last on their ship Bear of Oakland and were given the warmest kind of a welcome in Washington by President Roosevelt, Secretary of the Navy Swanson, other officials and a host of their relations and personal friends. The admiral and Mrs. Byrd spent a night in the White House. Then he was joined by his mother, Mrs. Eleanor Bolling Byrd, and his four children, and the family party left for the Byrd home at Winchester, Va. The Bear of Oakland and the Jacob Ruppert, supply ship of the expedition, departed from the Washington navy yard for Boston, the admiral planning to board the Ruppert en route.

Admiral Byrd

Admiral Byrd has plenty of work ahead, with the mass of data gathered in the Antarctic, a book to be written and a lecture tour to be made, but his plans for the immediate future were uncertain. "I would like to take a little vacation," he said. "Perhaps it will be in the Maine woods, where it will be cool."

THE administration's program in the senate was delayed by a renewal of Huey Long's attack on Postmaster General Farley. The Louisiana senator called up his resolution for an investigation of Farley and produced some new charges, and a protracted debate ensued. Long submitted an affidavit made by Helen Humphreys, a former employee of the James A. Stewart company, New York contractors, accusing Farley of manipulating government contracts and giving valuable stamps to prospective purchasers of materials from the General Builders Supply corporation, Farley's firm. These stamps were so valuable, Long charged, that a bank lent $40,000 on them.

BY A vote of about 2 to 1 the striking workers in the Toledo Chevrolet plant decided to accept a compromise offer that had been fixed up by federal labor committeemen, A. F. of L. leaders, company officials and federal mediators. It was expected that this would result in the return to work of 35,000 men in Toledo and other motor car manufacturing centers. The strike in Toledo was engineered by the local union and really was not in accord with the plans of the American Federation of Labor.

RURAL electrification administration, one of the new divisions of the works relief program, was established by President Roosevelt in an executive order, and Morris L. Cooke, a Philadelphia engineer, was appointed to be its chief. The sum of $75,000 was allotted for its administrative expenses, and allocations are to be made later for authorized individual projects.

M. L. Cooke

The executive order described the duties and functions of the new unit as "to initiate, formulate, administer and supervise a program of approved projects with respect to the generation, transmission and distribution of electrical energy in rural areas."

The order permits the administrator to acquire by purchase or by the power of eminent domain any real property or any interest therein and improve, develop, grant, sell, lease or otherwise dispose of any such property.

DENNIS CHAVEZ, who contended that he really defeated Bronson M. Cutting in the election of a United States senator from New Mexico last year, now has Mr. Cutting's seat in the senate. Following the senator's death in an airplane crash, Mr. Chavez was appointed by Gov. Clyde Tingley to fill the vacancy. He will hold office until the next general election in November, 1936, when a successor will be elected, and that is likely to be Mr. Chavez again.

Dennis Chavez

The new senator, who is the head of the Democratic party in New Mexico, was born in that state 47 years ago. While serving as a senate clerk he attended Georgetown university law school and after returning to Albuquerque to practice law he was elected to the state legislature. In 1930 he was elected New Mexico's one representative in the national house and was re-elected in 1932. He resigned in 1934 to oppose Cutting in the senatorial race and was defeated by about 1,000 votes.

EXTENSION of the NRA for one year, and not for two as asked by President Roosevelt, is advocated by the American Liberty league, which in a statement issued from Washington says the resolution offered by Senator Bennett Clark is the most feasible method of rescuing business from bureaucracy and experimentation.

"Commendation is due to the senate finance committee, which voted out the resolution of Senator Clark rather than the administration bill of Senator Harrison," the league said. "The bill has all the earmarks of a tricky attempt to avoid a definite determination of the constitutional validity of the recovery act through a decision of the Supreme court.

"The shifting of the legal foundation of the NRA might permit its continuance, following an adverse decision, until new test cases could be advanced through successive steps to the highest court.

"The Clark resolution, aside from its advantages, is free from any attempt to prevent the courts of the nation from fulfilling their constitutional duty of passing upon the validity of the legislation."

SEVENTEEN years ago the first official government air mail service between New York and Washington was established, when Lieut. Torrey Webb in an army plane started from Belmont Park, L. I., for the National Capital with a load of mail. The anniversary was celebrated at Newark airport with the opening of the new $500,000 administration building, federal, state and New York city officials taking part in the program. Amelia Putnam dedicated a new amphibian plane, and one of the original six army mail flyers, Lieut. Edwin W. Kilgore of Short Hills, N. J., was among those present.

BECAUSE the Patman inflation bonus bill would be easier for the President to veto than the Vinson measure, some of the administration senators joined with the Patman followers to put the former bill through the senate by a vote of 55 to 33. Previously, for some devious reason, the senators put aside the compromise measure offered by Pat Harrison's committee with the assurance that Mr. Roosevelt would sign it. That the President would veto the Patman bill was taken as a certainty and it was believed the inflationists could not gather enough votes to override the veto in the senate, though they had enough in the house.

Rep. Patman

Rather surprisingly, Senator William G. McAdoo of California, a former secretary of the treasury, advocated the Patman bill, asserting that it was "a mere conjecture" that the issue of $2,200,000,000 in noninterest bearing notes, or greenbacks, would be inflationary.

"We have nothing in the United States today but greenbacks," he said. "Is your money redeemable in gold? Is it redeemable in silver? No. It is redeemable in nothing but the honor and good faith of the American people.

"What constitutes inflation is a matter of conjecture. It is also a mere conjecture that we must have a so-called specie basis. The best proof of that is that, since going off gold, the dollar is as sound as it ever was.

"The issuance of $2,000,000,000 in new currency would affect the credit of the United States about as much as if I threw a shovelful of sand into the ocean and tried to stop the incoming tide."

Some friends of the measure, after the President indicated he would veto it, decided it might be better to amend it than to lose it entirely. They proposed to give the President the choice of several ways of paying the bonus certificates.

ACCORDING to the Department of Justice, its plans for the establishment in Washington of a national crime institute and a central radio station for broadcasting police news are nearing completion. An advisory committee has made a preliminary report on the crime institute, and 200 local police officials have warmly endorsed the suggestion of J. Edgar Hoover, chief of the division of criminal investigation, for the establishment of the radio station.

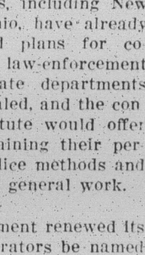
A modest beginning for the training school, crime laboratory and "clearing house," to be known as the National Crime Institute, was suggested by the advisory subcommittee, headed by Justin Miller, special assistant to the attorney general.

About twelve states, including New York, Illinois and Ohio, have already started or completed plans for coordinating police and law-enforcement activities through state departments of justice, it was revealed, and the contemplated crime institute would offer them facilities for training their personnel in scientific police methods and for co-ordinating their general work.

ETHIOPIA'S government renewed its demand that arbitrators be named to settle the disputes between that country and Italy, as provided in a treaty, and Great Britain and France were reported to be trying earnestly to persuade Italy to a peaceful course. Unless settlement of all differences is assured at the League of Nations council meeting May 20, or if more Italian troops are sent to the Ethiopian border, Emperor Haile Selassie will mobilize his warriors.

Foreign residents of Addis Ababa said they were ignorant of any war preparations by Ethiopia, and that there had been no troops or munitions concentrations or censorship on travel. This contradicted a story in a Rome newspaper to the effect that great quantities of munitions had been shipped into Ethiopia and were being concentrated, along with thousands of troops, near the borders of Italian Somaliland and Eritrea.

FROM Mexico City to the Metropolitan airport at Newark, N. J., nonstop, 2,100 miles in 14 hours and 22 minutes. That is the new record set up by Amelia Earhart in her red monoplane. Her husband, George Palmer Putnam, and more than 3,000 other enthusiastic persons were at the airport to welcome her, and she was almost mobbed by the throng.



Amelia Earhart

After her start from Mexico City, Mrs. Putnam was not heard from nor reported seen for more than six hours. Her course took her straight east at first, high over the mountain peaks between the Mexican capital and Tampico. She was not seen at the oil port, nor was she reported by radio. Observers knew, however, that she expected to be above 10,000 feet as she crossed the shoreline out over the gulf for her 690 mile hop over the water to New Orleans.

Passing over New Orleans, she communicated by radio with the Department of Commerce station there, and then flew swiftly along the airways of American Air Lines and Eastern Air Lines. As she swooped over Hoover airport, Washington, Eugene Vidal, director of the air commerce bureau, radioed: "You have done a splendid job, so come down." But Amelia replied, with thanks for the invitation, that she was going on through.

Bedtime Story for Children

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

DANNY SHAKES MORE THAN EVER

DANNY MEADOW MOUSE was trapped. He was trapped, but not caught, which sounds rather mixed and isn't at all. You see he was trapped because Billy Mink was waiting for him just outside the only doorway to that hollow log in which he was hiding. But he wasn't caught because the doorway was too small for Billy Mink to get through and Billy couldn't reach him, despite all his efforts.

"You'll have to come out some time and I'm going to stay right here and wait for you," declared Billy Mink. "You may just as well come out now as to keep me waiting, because you are going to be caught anyway and I am going to catch you."

"You'll Have to Come Out Some Time and I'm Going to Stay Right Here and Wait for You," Declared Billy Mink.

Danny didn't say a word. He held his tongue, which was the wisest thing he could do. It usually is wise to hold one's tongue. But I suspect that it was fear more than wisdom which caused Danny to hold his tongue. You see, poor Danny was shaking all over with fear. He knew that for the time being he was safe, but he also felt sure that if Billy Mink kept his word and watched just outside that doorway he would either starve to death inside that hollow log or furnish Billy Mink a good meal.

Danny couldn't decide which end would be the worst and the more he thought it over the more he shivered and shook. Either end was dreadful. The fact is Danny Meadow Mouse was so frightened that he wasn't using his usually lively wits at all. It never once entered his head that if Billy Mink waited long enough for him to starve, Billy would himself be likely to starve, and that is something Billy would be the very last person in the Great World to do. Billy is altogether too active to be patient.

But Danny was too frightened to think of this and so he crouched shivering and shaking, as miserable a Meadow Mouse as ever lived. "I ought to have remembered Billy Mink's wonderful nose and that if he once found my trail he would follow me straight here," thought Danny. "I ought to have waded in the water after crossing the Laughing Brook and so broken my trail. I ought to have found a hiding place with more than one entrance. I ought—but what's the use of thinking the things I ought to have done and didn't do? There isn't any. There isn't any at all."

That was quite true. When it is too late there seldom is any use in thinking of what should or should not have been done. But because there seemed to him nothing else to think about, Danny Meadow Mouse continued to think about his mistakes and to shiver and shake with fear. And outside Billy Mink grinned and licked his lips and tried to think of some way to make Danny Meadow Mouse come out of that hollow log.

QUESTION BOX

by ED WYNN, The Perfect Fool

Dear Mr. Wynn:

There is a very rich man in our town who goes horse back riding every day, but he only wears one spur and wears that always on the boot which is on his right foot. Can you tell me why he only wears one spur and that one always on the right foot?

Yours truly,
E. QUINE.

Answer: He probably is an efficiency expert and figures if he can get the right side of the horse to start the left side will start, too.

Dear Mr. Wynn:

My grandfather is an old sea captain and he tells me all sorts of tales about the ocean, but whenever he mentions the ocean he calls it the "angry ocean." Why does he call it the angry ocean?

Yours truly,
ANN GLOE SAXON.

Answer: He thinks the ocean is an angry because it has been crossed so often.

Dear Mr. Wynn:

I don't know what to do, so am asking you to help me. I hate to see my husband intoxicated. I sit up for him every night and he always comes home drunk. Gee, how I hate to see him when he comes home! What can I do?

Sincerely,
POLLY ANNAH.

Answer: Don't sit up for him any more.

Dear Mr. Wynn:

I am a woman thirty-four years of age and weigh 196 pounds. I want to reduce, so I went to a doctor who told me to take 20 rolls after breakfast. I started in today but after I ate 12 rolls I felt uncomfortable. Can you suggest some other recipe?

Yours sincerely,
IMA SITE.

Answer: Try twenty turn-overs.

Dear Mr. Wynn:

A friend of mine is in the hospital with a fractured skull. The doctors say that all my friend keeps saying is: "I was hit with a sandwich." Do you think it is possible for him to get a fractured skull from being hit with a sandwich?

Truly yours,
P. KNUTT BUTTER.

Answer: It must have been a "club" sandwich.

MOTHER'S COOK BOOK

KITCHEN SHORT CUTS

THERE are so many culinary operations needlessly repeated day after day in numberless homes, making gravies, mixing pastry for pies, cheese sticks and tarts, all at different times, when one process would make all three.

One of the daily tasks in most homes at the dinner hour is the making of gravies. The French word roux covers the base or thickening of gravies There is white roux and brown which is simply white flour browned.

A hurriedly made sauce or gravy is apt to be served undercooked. By preparing the roux beforehand and keeping a surplus on hand, time is saved.

For the white roux melt one-half cup of shortening in a heavy frying pan, add three-fourths of a cup of flour and cook slowly, stirring constantly until it is thoroughly blended and well cooked. Remove from the fire and store in a cool place until needed. For thickening soups, white sauce, creamed chicken or vegetables, use one to two tablespoons of the roux to each cup of liquid, according to the thickness desired.

To make brown roux, use the same proportions of fat and flour, but stir and cook until thick, smooth and brown, using care not to scorch. This, too, may be stored and used as thickening for meat gravies, mushroom sauce, stews and highly seasoned dishes.

A french dressing much liked and one which will keep two weeks in the ice chest is prepared as follows: Chop one small southern onion, two tablespoons each of red and green pepper, one tablespoon each of celery and parsley, a teaspoon of sugar and salt and cayenne to taste, with the vinegar and oil in proportion of one to three or four. Add two tablespoons of the piquant french dressing to the mayonnaise when serving. Hard-cooked eggs may be added, but should not be put into the dressing until ready to use.

Do YOU Know—

That the umbrella was described in the early dictionaries as "a portable penthouse to carry in a person's hand to screen them from violent rain or heat." In the Middle ages it was considered a mark of rank and honor much used in ceremonial processions. First used in the United States in Baltimore in 1772.

LOVE'S LAMPS

By ANNE CAMPBELL

MY LOVE that burned with just a single flame,
A chaste white taper lit for you alone,
In twenty years has spread itself to claim
A dozen conflagrations for its own.
It warms itself upon our children's lips,
And sends up signal fires our friends may see.
They come to us with glowing finger-tips,
Warmed 'neath the roof that shelters you and me.

Sometimes I think of those dear selfish days
When you were all my world, my own blue sky;
But now our children bless me with your gaze;
A dozen lovely lamps are flaring high.
But like the constant star above the hill,
My love for you is burning brightly still.

MEMORY OF WAR NEVER LASTING

Horror Has Small Effect on New Generations.

It is not so long since war was "outlawed" and the outlaw was ostracized. Even that mild and gentle child named Neutrality was not mentioned in polite or academic society. The slogan was not neutrality in thought, but peace in thought.

Now the outlaw is found not to be dead, but lurking in the woods, and it is discovered that all nations border on the same forest. The youth and some of their elders contemplate the future possibility of war by forswearing any participation in it—when it comes. Veterans' organizations advocate legislation now to take the profit out of war—when it comes. Scholars and students of peace begin to re-examine the utility of our traditional neutrality policy as a device for keeping us out of war—when it comes.

Through it all drones the refrain of those who picture the horrors of the next war—the wiping out of cities from the air; newer and more frightful gases; death rays. The same song was sung before 1914 and long, long before. It has never deterred nations from war, because it acts, if at all, on the individual and not on the mass, not on the nation, not on the government.

Even for the individual it is too overwhelming and too remote to be grasped except by those in whom it touches and torments the chords of personal memory. Soon a new crop has ripened. Those impersonal things known as governments respond more readily to the stern high calls of national honor and prestige. They seek, often sincerely, the welfare of their country. It is both a material and a spiritual welfare. Would either be served by war today or on a near tomorrow?—Philip C. Jessup, in Current History.

NEW MAYOR STANDS AGAINST POLITICAL FIXERS

Mayor Percy J. Benbough, in his called meeting last week, told operators of legitimate and illegitimate business just where they stood with the new administration. One special thing he made plain was that there would be no favorites; that political wire pullers and pay-off men would have no stand-in with the council or with the law, if he had his way.

Those who previously have paid for "protection" will have no better chance than those who do not pay the "fixers," and he strongly advised no business to longer stand for this sort of graft.

The mayor did not mince words, his statements were plain, and it is hoped San Diego is due for a cleaner administration with less corruption. The people who are building for a substantial future trust the mayor will be able to carry out his out-spoken policy, given generally by him in the following statement:

"There is a class of person, the would-be politician, the chisler, the man who would put you on the spot or try to, or try to scare or frighten you in order to get something from you that you have no right to pay for, and that is the man we are putting on the campaign against. You need not fear for your license or your business. I mean that. No one will scare me, and I believe I also speak for the balance of the council. We are going to get rid of the chiseler, the four-flusher and the rats, and we need your help. I am not accusing anyone. I am telling you of our platform from now on and that is what you may expect. The councilmen's and the mayor's offices are open to you at all times.—If you want anything corrected, just appear in the right way."

The resignation of Dr. Chester Webber from the City Board of Education came as a total surprise to most people of San Diego. Dr. Webber stated the office took too much of his time from his personal business. He has made a splendid, well balanced official, and should have the sincere thanks of the citizens he has served. Jacob Weinberger, who was named by the board to fill the vacancy, has served something like fifteen years with that body previously, with a splendid record of service.

What a world this would be if everybody were sincere! A strictly sincere person is an admirable human being, especially when society and business are so tainted with dishonesty and trickery. We are just what we set out to be. If it is honest integrity and sincerity we go about with a brave, unselfish countenance, conveying a smiling disposition and casting an influence that permeates every soul we meet. You can't be a grouch for long, without showing it in your face; neither can you play tricks to get the start of someone in business, without you wearing the brand in your face, even if you escape being caught.

Perhaps the most important agency adopted by the Federal Government, is the National Housing act. No doubt but what there are literally millions of homes everywhere, and in California in particular, that are both unsanitary and uncomfortable because of laxity in conveniences, deprived the living public on account of lack of funds to make repairs or rebuild. One of the supreme blessings of modern life should be love and happiness as found in the home. A well organized, happy home is an inspiration to all who enter it. This is where real joys should be found. It is where child-character is formed and all domestic fruition finds its goal. The National Housing Act gives splendid opportunity for advancing civilization through its present efforts.

While we observe May 30th as Decoration Day, it is well to remember that it also is the anniversary of the tragic death of Jean of Arc, heroine of France and called the "Maid of Dreams" who was burned to the stake May 30, 1431—504 years ago. As a little girl she became deeply affected by the political woes of her country. France had been conquered by the English and she took upon herself, at the consent of Charles VII, to go into battle array against Orleans, with an army of 10,000 men, disguised as a general dressed in male attire. Her inspired leadership gave her other successful victories, but later she as taken prisoner and delivered to the English, who tried her for heresy, burned her alive and her ashes were thrown into the Seine river.

We too often reflect on old age as a "quitting time." And it is true that in the average mind, we give up physiologically, because of drawing near to old age, when really, age is merely an incidental factor to physical wellbeing. The great source of life is vigor, stamina, health, character. Unless a person looks to this end as the great foundation, his defeat is sooner and more certain. Many a person has proved his best to the world after 70 years of age. It has been truly said, "Difficulties call out great and beautiful qualities of mind and soul. Hardship is discipline, and its product is a keen intellect, greater force of character, and more abundant life." Therefore it can be said of a self-governed citizen, who has rounded out his "threescore years and ten," provided he has been a desirable neighbor, a reliable business associate and a promoter of peace and friendship —he is a useful and beneficial worker without an age-limit.

Your Part of California State Debt is $68.70

San Diego county taxpayers owed a bonded debt of $68.70 for every man, woman, and child in the county, for county and district bonds outstanding as at June 30, 1934, a study of the bonded debt of California counties, recently completed by California Taxpayers' association, reveals. County bonds and school and other bonds outstanding in the county, excluding municipalities, totaled $16,889,287, of which $2,671,000 were county bonds and $14,218,287 were district bonds.

The county ranked fourth from the highest of California counties in per capita bonded debt outstanding, the association found. Two counties, Mono and Trinity, showed no bonded debt outstanding, while thirteen counties had a bonded debt outstanding of more than $50.00 per capita, these counties being Colusa, which was highest with a debt of $91.33 per capita. Riverside, Sacramento, San Diego, Fresno, Yuba, Yolo, Los Angeles, Sutter, Orange, Santa Barbara, Contra Costa, and Ventura.

"The public debt is no easy burden on the people of California," delared James Mussatti, exeutive secretary of the association, in discussing the study. "The actual and potential public bonded on the people of California for the last fiscal year was $3,466,000,000 or 57 per cent of the assessed value of all property in the State."

Memorial Day

(Copyright, W. N. U.)

Memorial Services at Point Loma National Cemetery a Huge Success.

The largest aggregation to witness this annual ceremony was on hand at the Bennington monument, Point Loma national cemetery last Sunday morning. From the sounding of assembly by the Marine bugler at ten o'clock sharp, to the last word of the benediction by chaplian J. M. Anderson, those present witnessed an hour of interesting commemorative exercises that were pronounced the best and most impressive ever to be put on anywhere in San Diego. Due to the age and infirmities of the G.A.R. comrade, F. S. Brown, of Bennington Camp, U.S.W.V., spoke briefly in their behalf. Comrade G. C. Heller also of Bennington Camp gave a graphic word picture of the explosion on the U.S.S. Bennington in San Diego harbor the morning of July 21, 1905 which snuffed out the lives of sixty members of her crew who lie burried before the monument. Commander F. C. Sherman, U.S.N. aid to Admiral W. T. Tarrant local naval commandant gave an interesting address upon the United States and their part in the universe of nations. Father Connolly of Sacred Heart Parish, Ocean Beach, asked the invocation.

Bonham Brothers trumpet trio won commendation from all present by their excellent rendition of, The World Is Waiting For The Sunrise, Trees, My Buddy and The Old Rugged Cross. They also furnished the accompaniment for Mrs. Oschinerro's solo, Sleep Soldier Boy. These three boys proved by their performance Sunday that they are the outstanding trumpet trio in Southern California. Their perfect rendition of the above numbers without music or direction, was pronounced marvelous by professional musicians who were present. Bonham Brothers are to be commended for their wonderful work with the boys in their band, of which the trumpet trio is a part. It is hoped that these boys can be secured to render selections at the old time barbecue next month so that more of our Ocean Beach citizens can hear and appreciate their music.

The following organizations participated in rendering tribute at the services: G. A. R., G. A. R. Relief Corps and Circles by Mother Croghan, United Spanish War Veterans and auxiliaries by comrade and Mrs. Dayton, American Legion and Legion Police post 461 by comrade Chas. A. Padgett, American Legion auxiliaries and Fighting Bob auxiliary by Mrs. Shields, Disabled American Veterans and auxiliaries by comrade Becker and Mrs. Becker of Harry M. Nelson chapter. County Council Veterans of Foreign Wars, by comrade Kenneth F. Clark; Ladies Auxiliaries department of California and Nevada by Mrs. Cora Willis, department chaplain, V.F.W. County Council auxiliaries, V.F.W. by Mrs. Jerma Jewell chaplain, Canadian Legion by sergeant Tomes of Ocean Beach, Gold Star Mothers of the World War by Mother Judd, Golden Poppy chapter American War Mothers by Mrs. Mary A. Ross, president; The U.S. Army-Sgt. Major R. F. Fastnacht, Fort Rosecranz; The U.S. Navy, Ch. Mach. mate K. F. Clark; the U.S. Marine Corps, sergeant Wallace W. Scott, U.S.M.C.; Boy Scouts of America by Albert Robinson, troop 29, Ocean Beach; Girl Scouts of America by Mesdames Fish and Shields of Ocean Beach; Daddy A. J. Allen and Mother Moreno for their respective sons.

The local post and auxiliary desire to express through these colums their sincere thanks to the following residents who by their liberal donations of flowers made the successful floral display and trbutes possible; Mrs. Conklin; 4652 Santa Monica; Mr. Cole, 4557 Brighton; Mrs. O'Connor, 4620 Saratoga; Father Connolly Sacred Heart Parish, Sunset Cliffs Blvd.; Mrs. Tschatter, Muir; Mrs. Hughes, 4731 Muir; Mrs. Oberhauser, 4650 Santa Monica and the Broadway Florists, San Diego. Under the expert direction and supervision of Mrs. Eleanor McCaffery the ladies of the local auxiliary were able to work these floral donations into wreaths, sprays and set pieces that were real works of art amongst the outstanding of which were, Cross Of Malta, Gold Star, Cross, and a pillow of Red White and Blue flowers for Daddy A. J. Allen. A total of 579 sprays were prepared and placed one upon each grave in the cemetery and 24 wreaths, etc., for tributes in the services at the monument. Members of the post and auxiliary worked late Saturday night preparing these floral tributes and members of troop 29 Boy Scouts of Ocean Beach were on hand at 7:30 Sunday morning to assist in transporting them to the cemetery and the placing of them on the graves. The local troop deserves credit for the excellent and efficient manner these boys performed their tasks.

It is indeed gratifying to know that Ocean Beach has an organization which has so successfully carried out a task of the size and nature of this memorial service and to increase the scope from year to year. So successful has the local organization been in this matter that it is more than likely they will be assigned this service as a permanent duty in the very near future.

Sale Of Buddy Poppies Exceed Expectations

The members of the Lieut. Bert A. Allen post and auxiliary 2415 V. F.W. desire at this time to thank the merchants and citizens of Ocean Beach for their excellent response to the plea "Buy A Buddy Poppy Please." Through their willing and liberal purchases of these memorial flowers the local merchants and citizens have made possible sales of over fifteen hundred poppies by the local post and auxiliary. This figure exceeds by half any previous year's sales and the local post and auxiliary feel that in part this response was due to the fact that the merchants and citizens of Ocean Beach do appreciate the work being done by these organizations and desire at this time to state that they will express their appreciation, as in the past, by carrying out to the utmost the motto of their organization of Honoring the dead by service to the living.

LIEUT. BERT A. ALLEN POST No. 2415 AND AUXILIARY

The next regular business meeting of Lieut. Bert A. Allen post No. 2415 V.F.W., will be held in their post room on Abbott St. next to the Ocean Beach police station, Thursday evening, June 13th, at which time final instructions to delegates to the Department Encampment in Bakersfield will be given. Visiting comrades will find the same warm welcome as in the past, and it is hoped that faces of a number of visiting comrades will grace the meeting.

The experimental monthly stag parties have proven so successful that they will be a regular affair during the summer months at least. These meetings are open to all visiting comrades and all friends of comrades be they members or visitors in Ocean Beach. The last stag party held Friday evening, May 17, was a huge success. At this meeting Pat of Pat's Malted Milk shop stated he was applying for transfer from his present post in New York to 2415. Glad to have you with us Pat.

Some of the ladies of our auxiliary are expressing considerable concern over the condition of the post. The cause of said concern being that parasite known in military parlance as the cootie. A few members of the post have been afflicted for some time but no attention was paid; then at the last stag party these and others so afflicted in other posts became rampant and as a result the following good comrades have now become full fledged brethern in the military order of the Cootie. H. S. Remington, Jack McCaffery, Bill Madigan and Cappy F. H. Norris. Look out you other comrades or the cooties will get you.

Our post has been requested and has accepted the responsibility of arranging the parade and pageant in connection with the Old Timers Barbecue to be held in Ocean Beach the later part of this month. All you guys can ride a hoss or grow a set of whiskers come out to the next post meeting June 13, and let's talk it over. We have a job to do here comrades, so let's get busy and put this over in regular V.F.W. style, Zummy oil up that trombone.

BAPTIST CHURCH SERVICES

Rev. W. S. Dunn will occupy the pulpit in the morning hour of worship and his sermon subject will be "The Purpose of Christ's Sacrifice." Following the sermon the Lord's Supper will be observed.

There will be a service of songs at 7:30 p. m. at which time the pastor will speak on the subject "The Unexpected Blow".

The choir will render special music at both services.

MRS. HOOVER GUEST OF SAN DIEGO COUNTY GIRL SCOUTS

Mrs. Herbert Hoover, honorary vice president and member of the executive board of Girl Scouts National Board was the guest at a tea in Florence Burnham hall from 4 to 6 p. m., Wednesday, May 29, by the San Diego County Girl Scouts

POINT LOMA HIGH SCHOOL GIRL SCOUTS

Addie Evelyn Fish and Otila Shields placed a wreath at the foot of Bennington monument, in the name of the Girl Scouts of San Diego county, Sunday, May 26th. They were guests of the Lt. Bert A. Allen post and auxiliary of the V.F. W. Mrs. Otila Shields, lieutenant of Silver Arrow troop, placed a wreath in the name of American Legion auxiliaries.

CHURCHES OF CHRIST, SCIENTIST

"When the wicked spring as the grass, and when all the workers of iniquity do flourish; it is that they shall be destroyed for ever." This verse from the Psalms is the Golden Text in the Lesson-Sermon on Sunday in all branches of The Mother Church, The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Mass. The Lesson-Sermon denounces ancient and modern necromancy, alias mesmerism and hypnotism.

These words of Isaiah are included among the Bible citations in the Lesson-Sermon: "No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper; and every tongue that shall rise against thee in judgment thou shalt condemn. This is the heritage of the servants of the Lord, and their righteousness is of me, saith the Lord. . . . Seek ye the Lord while he may be found, call ye upon him while he is near: let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts."

The Lesson-Sermon includes also this passage from "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "We should become more familiar with good than with evil, and guard against false beliefs as watchfully as we bar our doors against the approach of thieves and murderers."

THE THEOSOPHICAL SOCIETY: POINT LOMA

"Occultism and Modern Science" is the subject chosen by B. de Zirkoff for his forum-lecture to be delivered at Theosophical headquarters on Point Loma this coming Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

It will be the aim of the speaker to relate the ultra-modern scientific theories and hypotheses regarding the nature of the physical world, to the age-old teachings of occultism concerning the universe; he purposes to show to what extent present day science has already invaded the domain of pure metaphysics and how the greatest exponents of the scientific world of thought deal with matters pertaining to the occult side of nature, though they use a scientific terminology. The lecturer intends to dwell on the necessity of understanding the metaphysical concepts which lie behind the symbols of scientific men, so as to appreciate more fully the trend of present day science towards the esoteric doctrine

Serious questions from the audience will be welcomed, both on the above mentioned subject, and on any other theosophical topic.

CHAPTER I

"Good-by, then, Eileen. And take great care of yourself. I've probably missed the train and everything—but I don't give a hoot. Be sure to write from Marseilles and cable when you get in. And don't forget I'm coming out in March."

The girl clung desperately to her brother, her soft arms locked about him. Matt Kearney could feel that she was trembling, and:

"What's the matter with Kid Sister?" he asked, squeezing her.

"Kid Sister's miserable!"

"Because you don't want to go back?"

"No. But because somehow, Matt dear," she whispered very close to his ear, "I feel frightened about this journey. Don't be mad with me. I know it's silly, and I ought to be used to traveling by now. But I've got a wobbly, funny feeling."

Kearney looked down at the tangled curls nestling upon his shoulder; and in the light shining out from the cozy stateroom they gleamed and shimmered like burnished bronze. He hugged her affectionately and told himself that a chill suddenly experienced and resembling cold water trickling down his spine was due physically to the clammy quality of the night, and mentally to the girl's over-wrought condition.

But he was used to Eileen's moods, to the odd streak of superstition—a legacy from their Irish-American father—which sometimes he distrusted but always understood.

"Kid, dear," he said, and stroked her hair, "play fair. Seeing little girls off is bad enough anyway, without giving a fellow the breeze up."

"I'm sorry, Matt. It was utterly Big Pig of me."

She glanced up; and her blue-gray eyes were calm, except that he had a fleeting, odd impression that something—a shadow—had been banished at that very moment from them.

"No—only Little Pig," he said playfully. "I only wish I were coming with you."

"It wasn't fair, and I shouldn't have said it. It's just this beastly fog and having to let you go ashore in it. Give me a kiss, Matt, and we'll go and hunt Jack Rattray—although I really don't know how you're going to get home."

Wisps of mist floated under the lights. Not another soul was in sight on that deck, but there was activity on the deck below, and a tremendous clamor on the dockside. The R. M. S. Wallaroo was going out in the morning—sixteen hours late, thanks to one of those fogs, London Special, which sometimes hold up Thames traffic for whole days. All the other passengers seemed to have retired, with the possible exception of a few stragglers who might have been found in the smokeroom.

One last, lingering glance Kearney cast into the cozy stateroom which Eileen was to occupy to Colombo. He would cheerfully have resigned six months' pay to be going, too. The wardrobe trunk, which he had labelled himself, a green hat on the rack above the bed, a camera hung on the back of a chair, a dressing case open on the table. The box of a hundred cigarettes which Dawson Haig had brought down to the steamer that morning lay on the turned-back coverlet, and a pile of magazines on top of an unopened cabin trunk; three novels which Matt had brought for Eileen in the rack beside the green hat.

"Ah, well!" he sighed, "you'll be a comfortable Little Pig. Winter, the purser, is a star turn. You're at his table, and he'll see that everything's right. Jack Rattray is an old pal, so that you won't lack company."

"I shan't lack company," said Eileen archly.

Her mood changed, and she smiled mischievously. But Kearney welcomed the change, and:

"You little devil!" he said, and squeezed her hard. "Don't forget there's a spy aboard."

"I might buy him over!" said Eileen. "I'll tell Billy Haig!"

"Oh, don't please do that!" Eileen exclaimed in mock horror. "He might never run out to Colombo to have a cup of tea with me as he promised!"

But really her heart was very sad. Because she didn't expect ever to see Dawson Haig again.

She made a charming figure in the light streaming from the cabin door, simply dressed though she was in a jumper and tweed skirt. And Matt Kearney felt affectionately proud of his dainty sister.

"Come on," said he. "Let's go and dig old Rattray out. I must positively beat it. I've got at least a quarter of an hour's walk through dockland, and failing divine luck, a long voyage by motor bus."

Jack Rattray, chief officer of the Wallaroo, was exchanging a few pleasantries with the boss stevedore by the hatch of Number Three hold. But he broke off this not too parliamentary debate when the charming passenger appeared beside him with Kearney.

"What about a final?" asked Rattray.

"No final for me," Kearney replied. He grasped Rattray's hand. "Good-night, and all the best. I know you'll look after her."

Rattray, tall, leisurely, tacitturn, smiled his slow smile.

"Sure thing Bo'!" said he.

"You're mocking me!" Eileen cried, and punched the speaker forcibly in the ribs. "I don't have an accent like that. I speak better English than you do, anyway!"

"You speak more English," Rattray drawled provocatively.

"Very Big Pig," said Eileen.

But Kearney left the ship in a happier mood and experienced no return of that unpleasant chill. Eileen was in good company, and the voyage would pass like three days.

"Thank you, sir," said the man on the gangway, as he slipped half-a-crown into his hand. "Good-night."

"Good-night," Kearney called.

He picked his way through litter on the dockside. Just under an arc he paused, turned, and looked back. Jack Rattray and Eileen were standing on the deck by the gangway. He waved his hat and shouted:

"Good-by until March, and good luck!"

"Good-by, Matt," came the girl's voice; and:

"Cherri-ho, old boy."

That was Rattray.

The fascinating activity of those docks claimed Kearney. Here East meets West: produce of the Spice islands, tea of Ceylon, the timbers of Burma, jostle ironmongery from Birmingham, lie cheek by jowl with chemical products of Silvertown. At night, especially, under dockland floodlights, amid river noises and the hoarse voices of workers, the mystery of the port of London, type of a vast and ever turning wheel of empire, touched the poetry which was part of him. At times he thought of it as a strange grand song; which he improperly understood, to which he knew that even Kipling had failed to give its true color; which must elude the highest genius, because, although it was the work of man, it transcended man, being a god which man had created but no longer controlled.

He gave up his card to the policeman on duty, and ten paces beyond, looking back, could see merely a dim blur, marking the site of the box which that official occupied.

"If this d—n fog continues," he reflected, "my prospects are indifferent."

He stood there for a moment looking about him and failing to notice a man who, ten paces away, seemed to be watching the dock gates—a tallish man wearing a white raincoat, collar turned up, and a soft brown hat with the brim pulled down. But the other man had seen Kearney—and the sight of Kearney had set him dreaming. Colombo a year before. A year! It seemed only like a week! The mist dispersed before the eyes of the dreamer by the gates. He saw Mount Lavinia hotel, and a petite, slender girl in a blue frock crossing the deserted mahogany dance floor. She had been a sort of revelation, opening his eyes to all that had been lacking.

Had Some One Passed Him—Or Had He Imagined It?

He was among the stars again, could see the winking lighthouse callously stabbing the tropical night, hear the plaintive tremolo of a Tamil love chant floating up from the village.

From these haunting memories he was abruptly jerked back to reality. He withdrew into shadow.

A man was coming out of the gates—so muffled up in a heavy fur-collared coat that his features were indistinguishable. This man turned sharply left, passed Kearney, and was swallowed up in the fog.

And as he vanished, something—an instinct perhaps; or was it a faint odor suggestive of musk?—suddenly brought Kearney an unaccountable return of that sensation as though cold water trickled down his spine. He stared into the fog. Had someone passed him—or had he imagined it?

He hated this sensation—as of an indefinable dread—which twice, now, had oppressed him.

A hand rested on his shoulder.

Kearney twisted about with a cry. The man in the white raincoat stood just behind him. And, stock still, peering into the other's face:

"Good Lord!" Kearney exclaimed joyfully. "It's Dawson Haig!"

* * * * * * * *

Eileen watched from the rail until fog hanging over the dockside swallowed up Matt's figure. She turned and look at Jack Rattray. Seeing her expression:

"Whatever's the matter, Eileen?" said he.

"Oh, I don't know, Jack!" she replied. She was angry with herself. "I'm behaving like a perfect little idiot tonight. And if you ask me why, I can't tell you. It's just jim-jams. Except that I think it began with a horrible looking man wearing a fur-collared overcoat!"

"Oh!" said Rattray, conscious that duty called him but held against his will by the girl's unaccountable mood. "When did you see this furry bird? And was it his collar or his overcoat you didn't like?"

"His face." He looked into the open door of my stateroom while Matt was up in your cabin. I saw his reflection in my hand mirror. When I turned, he wasn't there."

"Do you mean he was actually in the room—fur collar and all?"

"No—foolish idiot! He was standing just in the doorway, and he was smiling . . . the most horrible smile imaginable."

"An Englishman?"

"Oh, no, he wasn't! A Chinaman."

"A Chinaman! In a fur coat! No wonder you were shaken up!"

"There was a queer musky smell, too—"

"Have you seen him since?"

"Yes. I saw him afterwards on the dockside, looking up at me."

"I think that settles it," said Jack Rattray reassuringly. "There was a bunch of stuff shipped by a Chinese agency down Limehouse way for a firm in Sydney. Some d—n silly mistake. They're hauling it out now—a h—l of a job—from Number Three hold. This oriental bird was probably the half-wit responsible. It's given me more trouble than the specie."

"The specie?"

"Yes. We're a Spanish galleon this trip, Eileen!" Rattray smiled his slow smile. "Minted gold from the Bank of England, consigned to the Commonwealth Bank of Australia. Look! It's just coming aboard. Two millions!"

Open lorries were driven onto the dock. Eileen, looking down, could see, as tarpaulin covers were hauled off, that they were laden with small square boxes.

"How feeble!" she exclaimed. "Where's the regiment of guards with fixed bayonets?"

"Not here, my child. Out of date. There's a police car full of 'tecs outside, though! Well, I must slip off now. They've rushed this little lot aboard us at the last moment, and I've got to find a safe home for it. Take my tip. Turn in with a book and, if you like, I'll have a nightcap sent along in about half an hour. Leave it to me."

"You're a Kind Pig," said Eileen, and squeezed his arm affectionately.

She had known Jack Rattray for three years. He had introduced her to Dawson Haig in Colombo—only a year ago. . . .

As he went off with his slow, long strides, she turned and entered her cabin.

Looking at the books on the rack and pulling a wry face, she contemplated unpacking yet to be done. She had been on board since noon, and knew she was desperately lazy. But, then, Dawson Haig had stayed to lunch when it was announced that the ship couldn't sail—and Matt, the good angel, had clung on to the last possible minute.

"Oh, bother!" she said.

She was tired but excited. Her mental condition puzzled her. This was not the first time she had traveled alone. She was used to the sea and had taken her maiden voyage at the age of twelve.

The memory of that strange lemon-yellow face, glimpsed between upraised flaps of an astrakhan collar and the pulled down brim of a soft black hat, haunted her ridiculously. Of course, the man was some Chinese shipping agent. The apparent evil of his smile might have been no more than a distorted reflection in the mirror.

She wondered if Dawson Haig would write. . . .

Queer, that odor, like musk. It seemed to hang about. . . .

Yes, she would turn in and read.

* * * * * * * *

"You see, Kearney," said Detective Inspector Dawson Haig, staring up at an old print which decorated the bar, "officially, my hands are tied. It's because I've always made a point of finding the loopholes in official regulations that I've got as far as I have."

The bar was sparsely populated. Two firemen, amiably drunk, lolled in a corner. A solitary, seedy-looking drinker sat against the wall, smoking his pipe and taking sips from a tankard. A shirt-sleeved barman made up the company.

Kearney smiled at the speaker. He regarded William Dawson Haig as one of the most remarkable men in London—a man destined to win an international reputation. Haig had been at Stonyhurst with Kearney—Michael Kearney, now United States consul at Colombo, at that time having been stationed in Liverpool. Catastrophe came just as Haig went up to Oxford. Endowed by his father with a load of debts and a posthumous V. C., he had enlisted in the Metropolitan police force.

"It seems to me," Kearney remembered him saying, "that a man must be judged by what he can do—not by the decorations his ancestors won. I couldn't live in an office, and I can't afford the army. But I'll make a first-rate copper!"

He was today the youngest detective-inspector in the criminal investigation department, with a great future assured.

Haig had laid his hat upon the counter, revealing a head of dark brown hair, cut close at the back and sides, like that of a prize fighter, but leaving a curly tuft on top. His clean-shaven pale face and dancing blue eyes also might have belonged to a potential lightweight champion.

He had pleasantly irregular features, and his smile was a grin which wrinkled up the corners of his eyes irresistibly. When Haig grinned, everybody grinned.

"Regulations weren't made for you," said Kearney, laughing. "But I'm still in the dark. You leave the Wallaroo after lunch, with dramatic farewells, and then bang me on the back at the dock gates at ten o'clock at night!"

Haig raised his tankard, contemplating it with interest, and:

"I gave you a lift as far as Limehouse," he reminded Kearney. "You ought to be thankful for that. And the beer is good. . . ."

Kearney banged the counter. The barman replenished the tankards. And, when he had retired:

"What's afoot?" Kearney asked in a low voice.

"I don't know!" was Haig's surprising answer. "I can only think there's been a bad leakage of news. Some time ago," he went on, "a consignment of pottery was sent from China to a firm in Birmingham. This consignment, unopened, was reconsigned to a Chinese firm in Sydney, per Messrs. King, shipping agents, of Limehouse. It was put on the Wallaroo. I checked it myself, this morning."

"Was that how you managed to get down to see Eileen off?"

"It was," Haig acknowledged, "and I blessed the chance! Now, here's what I meant when I said my hands were tied: neither K. division nor Scotland Yard have had power to open those cases of pottery. Oh, it's too d—n silly to talk about—because I know for a fact that they are stuffed with 'gum'!"

"Opium! But why send drugs from China to Australia via Birmingham!"

"I'm glad you asked that," said Haig. "It shows you're interested! The reason is this: the China ships touching at Australian ports get a h—l of an overhauling. Stuff coming from England goes through without difficulty. Those cases are specified to contain Staffordshire pottery, now!"

"Great Scott!" said Kearney. "That's pretty clever."

"I advised a pal of mine—Freeman, of the customs at Sydney—to do what we couldn't do. What happened? The stuff was taken off at the last moment! I got news at the Yard two hours ago."

"But surely you can do something now?"

"I can!" Haig returned.

He grinned again and emptied his tankard.

"Open the cases?"

"Oh, no! 'Mrs. Moggridge,' who makes our snappy laws, would never allow such a thing!"

"Then what?"

"This: if I can get evidence tonight—evidence I know to be there—I'll search the premises to which the 'pottery' has been moved. Then, I can open the cases!"

"Didn't you say the name was King?"

Haig nodded.

"Messrs. King's warehouse adjoins the establishment of Jo Lung, otherwise 'Shanghai Jo.' Jo Lung is the lad I'm after."

"Who is Jo Lung?"

"I thought," said Haig, sorrowfully regarding the speaker, "you were supposed to be an authority on Chinatown?"

Kearney smiled.

"I've written it up for my paper," he confessed. (He was London correspondent of the New York Universe). "But I seem to have overlooked Jo Lung!"

"Don't wonder!" Haig admitted. "He's not an easy man to know. Apart from which, he isn't the prime mover. The Big Chief is the man who supervised the removal of these cases from the Wallaroo tonight."

"And who is the Big Chief?"

"As I'm not sure, I won't answer," Haig replied. Let's stick to facts. . . ."

The two firemen, supporting each other lovingly, at this moment reeled out of the bar. As they disappeared, the door reopened to admit a customer who appeared to belong to the same trade as the firemen. A seafaring man evidently, but sober. Directly the barman having served him had retired:

"O. K., Norwich?" said Haig, addressing the new arrival.

Kearney started and stared from face to face; then:

"The lorry's back in King's yard, Inspector," the man reported—"and being unloaded."

Dawson Haig nodded, and turned to the melancholy citizen. "Join up, Wickham," he directed sharply. "All clear."

The man sprang up promptly; and Haig grinned into the bewildered face of Kearney.

"My own methods," he said. "The only way to deal with an oriental criminal." Then, to Wickham: "Got the card from Bernardson?"

"Got it at nine o'clock, Inspector, and came straight here. But I'm afraid I shall have to take your place on the Jo Lung job. The Chief sent for me just as I was leaving. They've got the missing witness in the Bond street case. You're to report back at once."

"D—n!" said Dawson Haig. "Also blast! The Bond street case is a fleabite to what I know to underlie this! Ah, well! Can you talk like a Chicago gunman, Wickham?" he asked.

"Afraid not, sir! Lancashire sees me out."

"What about you, Norwich?"

"I was counting on you, Inspector!"

"H—l!" said Dawson Haig; when:

"Obviously," Matt Kearney interrupted, "you're forgetting me! I don't claim to talk like a Chicago gunman, but I have, I am told, a recognizable American accent."

Haig hesitated, staring, then:

"By heaven!" said he, "my bumping into you tonight has been a double blessing! Wickham—" he glanced at the latter—"you'll come back in the car with me. Norwich, carry on—but with Mr. Kearney, here, in my place.

"And now, Kearney, listen: here's priceless 'copy' for you—though I don't know how you're going to get back!—"

"It doesn't matter. I'll find a way."

"You'll have to gamble on a stray taxi. But this is what I want you to do. . . ."

Species of Termites

Some of the species of termites of southern and tropical Africa build nests of clay twenty or more feet in height. These are called termitaria. Among these higher species, the termitaria are often gigantic structures of great durability. They are formed of earth particles cemented together with either saliva or fecal material and upon drying the impregnated earth becomes of a cement-like hardness. Besides those of the African species, mentioned, the most remarkable of all termitaria are the lofty steeple-like structures of northern Australia. These also reach a height of 20 feet with a basal diameter of 12 feet, and the interiors of such a nest present a maze of irregular chambers and passages. In its deeper recesses the brood is reared and the royal cell containing the queen termite is located.

How Russia Got Alaska

The voyage of Vitus Bering, resulting in the discovery of northwesternmost America, was made by order of Empress Elizabeth in 1740, and was thus added to the possessions of Russia. Thirteen years earlier Bering coasted northward far enough to satisfy himself that Asia and America were not connected.

Uncover Mayan Cities Fifteen Centuries Old

Carnegie institution scientists probing the dense jungles of Guatemala and Honduras have made new discoveries in connection with the ancient Mayan civilization which flourished in Central America when a few people still lived who could remember the crucifixion of Christ. Under many feet of deposited silt and tangled vegetation they have found cities once populous and richly built with palaces and temples, but deserted now for 15 centuries. One ruined city in particular in northern Guatemala has attracted attention. It is surrounded by a moat very similar to those used extensively centuries later in Europe. Originally the ditch was about ten feet deep and ten feet wide. It was spanned in different places by seven masonry bridges, and was connected with a nearby swamp so that during the rainy season it was filled with water. This is the first moated city ever found in America and it is not certain whether it was used as a means of protection against raiding tribes or whether it had a religious meaning. In Honduras an expedition has uncovered two stone altars and many monuments. All were ornately carved with the picture writing of the ancient Mayas which leaves us a record of their empire.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Kindness

Kindness resembles long-suffering in finding its chief objects in the evil and unthankful, but while the latter is passive and self-contained, kindness is an active, busy virtue. She is, moreover, of a humble and tender spirit, stooping to the lowest need, thinking nothing too small in which she may help, ready to give back blessing for cursing, benefit for harm and wrong. Kindness is the thoughtful insight, the delicate tact, the gentle ministering hand of love. —Findlay.

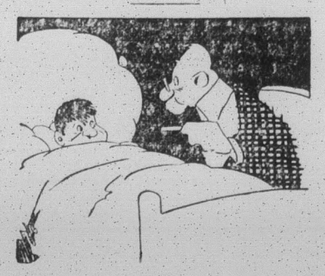
NOTHING DOING

"George thinks he can support me on his salary if we're economical."

"Can't he do it by only being economical himself?"

ROLL OVER!



Doctor—You sleep too much. You must get up two hours earlier in the morning.

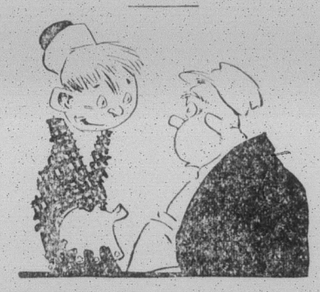
Patient—If it's all the same to you, doctor, I think I would prefer to retire two hours later.

MOTH-EATEN MAYBE

Reggy—I flatter myself that I have a well-stored mind.

Mary—Do you ever take it out of storage?

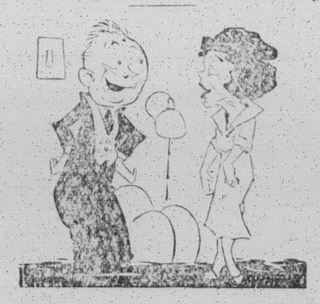
FLAVOR NEEDED



"Do yez always shmoke after ye dinner, Pat?"

"Oi do. Shure, me dinner don't taste roight whin oi ate onless Oi have a shmoke afterwards."

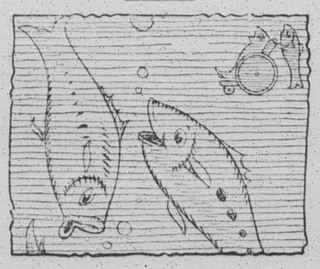
ZING-G-G-G



"Yes, I always preferred a girl who was handy with cooking utensils."

"Is that so? Well I can throw a rolling pin as straight as anyone."

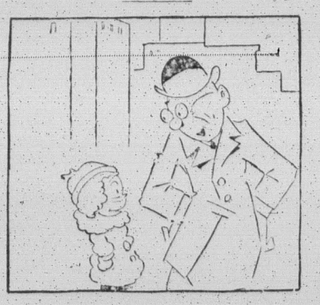
DROP HIM A LINE



"Who's that fellow in the invalid chair?"

"Oh, that's Mr. Weakfish."

OH, DOCTOR!

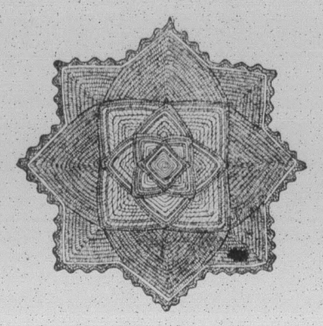


Suitor—So you think your sister ha a tender heart for me?

Little Sally—I dunno, but I know she says you give her a pain.

Unique "Primrose" Rug to Crochet

By GRANDMOTHER CLARK



This rag rug measures 42 inches and requires about three pounds of material to finish. It appears to be made of six squares each of a different size, with the horizontal positions alternating. Work is started with the center square about 5 inches in diameter. Triangles are then crocheted on the four sides of inner square forming the second square. Continue same way for third, fourth and fifth squares. The sixth square is the same size as fifth square and therefore requires smaller triangles on sides than the others. Colors should be so arranged that center is in light shades of yellow, while outer triangles represent the petals of flowers, and may be shaded in color desired. This can be made into a very attractive and unique rug, depending very much on the color scheme used.

This is one of the twenty-six crocheted and braided rugs illustrated with instructions in Grandmother Clark's rug book No. 25. Detailed instructions are given in this book for the "Primrose" rug, and if you are interested, send 15c to our Rug Department and we will send it to you by mail.

Hubby in a Corner

The Woman has been told that she encourages her husband to find fault, by humoring his every whim. But her answer is that he's the head of the house; the only husband she's got, and he's got a right to have things as he likes them, when he's at home.

And the other day he burst upon her with fire in his eye. "Mary," he commenced excitedly, "I don't like . . ." and paused with a curious change of expression, says the New York Sun.

His wife waited a long moment—two long moments—getting more and more curious. At last she spoke: "Yes, dear. What is it?"

John made no reply, and almost wished he hadn't started things up in the first place.

But Mary wasn't going to let go so easily. "I'm listening, John. Now, speak up and tell me what is it you—don't—like. . . .? Have you forgotten?"

That seemed to be that: "But," he mumbled, behind the sport columns, "I'll think of it presently."

LA JOLLA KIWANIAN VISITS CLUB ON STRETCHER

Myron Insko was chairman of the Wednesday Kiwanis luncheon with Dr. Frank R. Felt as his speaker.

Dr. Felt gave a thirty-minute talk to interested listeners on experiences hunting tiger and other animals in the jungles of India. The speaker stated that the tiger usually will run from man, but if wounded and trailed into the jungle it was a ten to one chance that the tiger would win. He told of a number of occasions where this had happened.

Four La Jolla members were present, George Stephan, Silas Putnam, Doctor Victor Alderson and Frank C. Harmon. Mr. Harmon was too ill to come without assistance but insisted that he felt well enough to make up his meeting and did not want to spoil his enviable record, that he says in October this year will complete his tenth year of 100 percent attendance.
